About

I grew up thinking that I would be an engineer or a physical therapist but ended up falling in love with fashion, more specifically pattern making.

I am very curious and eager to learn new things, so naturally, science was my path, but arts in general was always in my life. I was so confused about what I should study that I decided to have a gap year, and that was when I discovered a passion for fashion that was greater than everything.

I rolled up my sleeves and paid for my BA in Fashion and Textile design, it was a rough few years but my parents raised a fighter.

I love pattern making, you are creating a puzzle and it's very stimulating. Every day is a new adventure, and you have to keep learning, and I love learning new things.

I entered the working world at a young age, this helped me create a lot of skills in an early stage of life such as; excellent time management, working well under pressure, being very organized, learning quickly, great team working skills and management.

I am now looking for new challenges, and eager to learn even more.
